Dear Northern Republic Congress,

I am Emily Renden, and I am writing to inform you that I am alive, and my younger sister Eleanor Renden is dead.

According to the news I, Emily Renden, disappeared; however, it is my younger sister, Eleanor Renden, who disappeared. Here is what happened:

While shopping, my sister, and I heard the news that the President of the Republic died tragically due to a car accident. Our minds filled with shock and sorrow because the President is our mother.

Eleanor ran out the door, and I ran after her, hoping to comfort her after our mothers death. However, after I caught up to her, she told me she was furious because of the Eighty-ninth Amendment, which is:

"Only the oldest child can replace the President of the Republic, and the youngest child is forbidden from being president. If the oldest child dies or leaves the Republic of the fifteen colonies, there must be a new election, and the youngest child cannot run for President."

My sister drew a knife and threatened me that if I came closer she will stab me. Unfortunately, she took the knife and stabbed my shoulder. I screamed in agony. I refused to let her kill me, so I charged at her with all my remaining strength. She crashed onto the frigid ground. She was an inch away from stabbing my heart, but she stopped moving. However, she had another knife in her pocket. That knife moved as I pushed her, so when she tried to stand up the knife pressed into her heart. I cried and pleaded for Eleanor to be alive and wake up. Soon, it became dark, so I went home. I told the District News, and they went to the place where my sister died. Surprisingly, the corpse was gone! I don't know who took it. Although, I wonder why anyone would want Eleanor's corpse.

This is the truth. I would appreciate if you gave me my position as president of the Republic. I'm better than my mom and will help everyone. Please send me the message confirming my inauguration. Thank you, and have a wonderful day.

Sincerely,
